* Document may establish identity and lawful status.

++ If born outside the U.S., delayed birth certificates do not establish lawful status.

**IMPORTANT NAME CHANGE INFORMATION: If your current name does not match your identity document due to a name change(s) (marriage, adoption, court order, etc.), you may need to provide additional government-issued documents to support any or all name changes. For example, if you were born Jane Smith then married Tom Cooper and your legal name is now Jane Cooper, you will need to bring in your marriage license. If, however, your identity document matches your current married name (you have a current passport which says Jane Cooper), this is sufficient and you do not need to prove your name change.
